

Associate/Full Professor in Depth Reporting

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln College of Journalism and Mass Communications is seeking an associate/full professor in depth reporting, with expertise in investigative journalism or data journalism, to join our award-winning program as a Deepe Family Endowed Chair starting in August 2023. Funded by a $4.65 million dollar gift to the college, the Deepe Chairs will oversee our award-winning depth reporting program, where we spend a semester or more working on a single story with high-quality sources, graphics, data and multimedia components. In addition to teaching depth reporting or data journalism courses, the chairs will also teach in our core curriculum; advise student chapters of the Society of Professional Journalists and Investigative Reporters and Editors and travel with students to professional conferences and workshops; regularly publish scholarly or professional articles; contribute to the development of our curriculum; provide service to the college, university and profession; and other assigned duties.

Minimum qualifications include a Ph.D. in journalism, mass communications or a closely related field; or a master's degree and 10 years of professional journalism experience. Preferred qualifications include professional expertise in data journalism or investigative reporting and experience covering stories in diverse communities.

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln College of Journalism and Mass Communications is accredited by the ACEJMC and offers majors in advertising and public relations, broadcasting, journalism and sports media and communication. We create a student-centered environment providing hands-on experiences to enhance learning outcomes. Students are successful in national competitions, collaborate on research and complete internships with recognized agencies and companies in leading markets.

Employment begins in August 2023. Review of applications will begin on October 1, 2022 and continue until the position is filled or the search is closed.
