Sheldon Statewide Exhibition 2018–19

Sheldon Statewide is an annual exhibition and outreach program of Sheldon Museum of Art at the University of Nebraska. As part of a land-grant research institution, Sheldon shares the university’s mission of extending its offerings across the state. Since the program began in 1987, original artworks from Sheldon’s collection have been viewed by more than 330,000 people in twenty-four Nebraska communities.

Sheldon Statewide 2018–19 is made possible by generous support of Farm Bureau Mutual Insurance of Nebraska, Rhonda Seacrest, Nebraska Arts Council and Nebraska Cultural Endowment, and Sheldon Art Association.

For more information about Sheldon Statewide, contact Abby Groth, assistant curator of public programs, at 402-472-7858 or agroth@unl.edu.

In any natural or fabricated system, there are numerous moving parts that each perform important functions, provide organizational structure, or stimulate growth to the benefit of the larger whole. In the human circulatory system, for example, the muscle of the heart pumps blood through a network of veins and arteries to deliver oxygen and nutrients to the rest of the body. In a system of government, elected officials focus on various sectors of a city, state, or nation to ensure that concerns are addressed and order is maintained. While in the engine of a car, the burning of fuel releases energy necessary to power a system of integrated parts that propels the vehicle. Each system relies upon its individual components to successfully operate. But what about the human family system? What are its necessary parts, and how do they work together?

The thirty-second annual Sheldon Statewide exhibition, Family Style, investigates this question through the work of eighteen artists. Together, the artworks demonstrate that families of all types work through the events and routines of everyday life with members performing essential functions, providing structure and guidance, and growing in their own ways.

One might argue that, for a successful system, all actions by members of a family need to support and uplift the others, but human relationships are far more complex. A puzzling scene unfolds in the photograph Wedding Day, Harlem by James VanDerZee. A bride and groom are dressed in their finest, as the transparent image of a young girl sits at their feet. The girl’s mysterious appearance might represent a child hoped for or lost, two situations that provoke profound and complicated emotions. Similarly, Lydia Panas’s photograph Mother presents a mother and daughter in an unclear situation, looking directly at the camera and not at each other. What do their individual poses suggest about their relationship?

Any animal lover will tell you that pets are family. Richard Lindner’s lithograph Man’s Best Friend depicts a pink dog looking lovingly up into the eyes of a person who smiles down on his canine companion with equal affection. Those who have been part of an athletic team can attest that the bonds between teammates can be as strong as biological ties. Lynn Dance’s photograph Southeast High Locker Room After Championship Game, Lincoln reminds us that what is forged on the field often feels like family. Marvel Family by Sheldon Moldoff presents a conventional portrait of a not-so-typical extended family—made up of superheroes from an imaginary universe.

The objects in this exhibition offer a range of perspectives on family and relationships, from tight-knit to distant, from intimate to communal. Some families are given and some are chosen. As you look at the works of art in this exhibition, consider your own familial relationships. What role do you play in each system? Perhaps you will see reflections of yourself in these works of art. Exploring different kinds of families also helps us see beyond our own experiences and consider those of others.

Family Style represents a wide—but certainly not exhaustive—range of viewpoints from which artists examine the intricate relationships that make up parenthood, marriage, teamwork, and community.
